Anti-plagiarism agreement

To plagiarize is to copy excerpts of a text or to paraphrase a text without crediting the author.

Plagiarism is an infringement of the university’s ethical rules and is considered a fraud in all graded academic work.

When reference must be made to another text when writing an assignment, the author must follow the rules of academia and research:
- When the original text is quoted directly, it must be placed between quotation marks (or indented and typed in slightly smaller characters if the text is longer than several lines) and its reference must be given; the quoted text must be short.
- When the original text or excerpt is paraphrased or summarized, its reference must be given.

The same obligations apply to text published on the Internet and translations (original or not), as well as illustrations, tables and graphs.

If plagiarism is noticed in a paper, assignment, dissertation or thesis, the jury will inform the university’s disciplinary commission, which will issue a warning, reprimand or exclusion from the university or from any higher education institution.

Students must sign the following agreement upon registration:

I agree to follow the ethical rules governing the use of material written by others and to quote all the sources for texts to which I will refer in my assignments and works.
